Delta Air Lines to Launch a Narita-Seattle route for the First Time in 7 Years!

—The Narita-Seattle route launches on March 28, 2027—

Delta Air Lines (IATA code: DL) will launch the Narita-Seattle route on Sunday, March 28, 2027.

Seattle, the largest city in Washington State, located in the northern part of the U.S. West Coast, serves as one of the main gateways offering excellent access to the U.S. mainland from Japan. In recent years, the city has been attracting attention as a hub for cruise travel and national park tourism. It is also home to global companies, such as Microsoft and Starbucks, and is anticipated to host significant passenger traffic for both tourism and business.

Seattle is Delta Air Lines' largest hub on the West Coast, offering connections to over 50 major cities across North America. By taking advantage of Seattle, the closest major U.S. city to Japan, passengers will be able to efficiently connect to their destinations across North America, and this will further expand the options for Japanese customers visiting the U.S. for tourism or business.

Delta Air Lines will resume the Narita-Seattle route for the first time in the approximately seven years since March 2020.

In recent years, as travel demand from the U.S. to Japan has continued to rise, demand for travel from Japan to the U.S. has also remained steady. The launch of this route is anticipated to further accelerate people-to-people and economic exchanges between the two countries. With the expansion of Narita Airport's North American network, thanks to the launch of the route by Delta Air Lines, an airline boasting one of the world's leading networks, we invite you to enjoy a comfortable journey to Seattle and other destinations beyond across North America.
